

The New Age for First Responders

Renowned author, Mary Carew provides an analysis on how first responders are on the front line of terrorism in our cities. She proves a clear accurate view on how terrorism is moving into our cities and how first responders must be trained and prepared to meet the needs of its citizens. Police forces must move away from the traditional model of intelligence to a more in depth intelligence that includes, structure, function and process approach. This analysis must not only pick up terrorists activities, but show weaknesses in the first responders mitigated plans before an attack. Today the police are on the front lines in our city, hopefully preparing and training to respond to a terrorist attack in your city. In addition to the above, fire departments must be ready for a biological, chemical or nuclear attack and to respond correctly. There are many different types and fire departments must be able to respond correctly and quickly. If a biological, chemical or nuclear attack happens, firefighters must be able to move in quickly in order to reduce the loss of lives. Paramedics must be able to transfer people to hospitals effectively so they do not become exposed to any injury or chemical or biological attacks and hospital must be prepared to handle the injured. Terrorism is moving into the cities and all first responders must be trained to a level so that everyone is prepared. Cities must be prepared with a complete plan that outlines everyone roles. Each person must be given specific roles so they can act quickly. Plans can take up to two years to put together and for without it, lives will be lost. Citizens must be able to go to their own cities and towns and ask what these plans are and how they are to act in the time of an attack. It does not come down to having 72 hours with of food anymore. The author will outline what is needed so that cities, provinces-states along with federal authorities so that authorities can become prepared in the event of an attack.
